The art psychological work of Ferenc Mérei

Ferenc Mérei often discussed how much he owed to literature and the fine arts. As a young adolescent, it was literature that provided him with an escape, a mental refuge from the stocks of school; as an adult, in the isolated world of his prison cell, it was the memory of literary works, the intellectual engagement with them, that gave him the strength to endure the situation and to maintain his analytical vigor.

Group interaction as a learning enhancement factor in heterogeneous classes

In everyday practice, there are three forms of the learning-teaching process: frontal whole-class teaching, small group teaching, and individualized work. For school education to perform an organic function in social development, group work tasks have increasingly been applied besides traditional frontal and individual forms of teaching. This study demonstrates the positive effects of group work interaction, together with the theoretical underpinnings and a summary of international experiments in the field.

The theme of conscience in the teaching of Man and Society

The concept of conscience overlaps with various aspects of philosophical, anthropological, ethical, moral theological, psychological and legal domains. These disciplines provide a broad perspective, yet in this article the focus is on the education-psychological and didactic aspects of the issue.

Hidden dimensions: Reconstruction in visual education

The boundaries of construction are determined by the artist, the sponsor, and the internal structure of the work (such as function, technique, and material). Reconstruction, by contrast, is even more restricted: one has to get as close as possible to the original work.

Authority and career choice: A survey of authoritative attitudes amongst university students

The issue of authority is a dominant force in the entirety of social life, and it is one of the powers that determine behavior. The need for authority is primary. Children need authorities that lead them and provide them with safety. Adults meet a basic requirement of the adult role when they appear as authorities – which may also be viewed as a form of expressing an interest in others.

Shaping children's health and environment awareness

Health awareness is closely related to environment protection and a love of nature. Environment education needs to deal with the development of health and environment awareness at the same time. In our study, we learned about the opinions of eight-to-ten-year-old children about health, illness, factors causing diseases, and prevention.

New waves in European higher education

In order for East-Central European countries to join the Union in terms of politics, the judiciary, the economy and society, they need to catch up within the domains of the subsystems and institution systems. One such key area is higher education. Using statistical data, this paper investigates to what degree the newly adopted countries and those awaiting accession have been able to adapt themselves to relevant West European trends in the past fifteen years.
